Why is Certificate Attestation required?

Whether you're applying for a job, moving abroad, or admitting your child into a new school, you will be required to process certificate attestation. Failing to submit attested documents can prevent you from being admitted into educational institutions, being hired by a company, legally immigrating, and working abroad.

If you plan to move abroad with your family, you must process marriage and birth certificates attestation. Document attestation proves that they are genuine. The certificate will first need to be attested by the state where your child was born. Next is the Ministry of Foreign Affairs attestation, and lastly, the embassy attestation of the country you're seeking residency from.

The exact process applies to any applicant looking to work, study, and live abroad.

Attestation of Documents and Why Is It Required?

Moving to different countries is exciting, but it isn't easy. Today, most countries do not allow immigrants to apply for resident or employment visas without providing attested documents or certificates to prove their identity and qualifications.

Certificate Attestation is required when enrolling in foreign universities or renting an apartment. Once you've gathered all the required documentation, you will need to have them attested by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to prove that they are genuine. With the types of fraud, most entities worldwide will not accept documents without relevant attestation.

People are put off by the idea of the document attestation process because it is confusing. This is where Benchmark Attestation Services comes in! We will process your entire Certificate Attestation and Apostille requirements and deliver your documents back to you without any hassle.
